Famous Hispanic American Women

Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez

In just a few short years, Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez has become a leading voice for Hispanic Americans in politics and justice.

Also known by her initials AOC, she was born in the Bronx, New York to a parents Puerto Rico of Puerto Rican descent. She excelled through high school. In 2011, when she graduated college, Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez returned to New York and later campaigned for Senator Bernie Sanders.

Alexandria was sworn into office at age 29—making her the youngest woman to ever be elected to Congress. Along with Senator Ed Markey, Ocasio-Cortez sponsored a bill known as the Green New Deal, helping address climate change and creating economic stability through environmentally friendly jobs.

Jovita Idár

Jovita Idár believed wholeheartedly in fighting for women's right to education. While working at her dad's newspaper, La Crónica, she used the medium to speak up about women's rights, racism, and Mexican-Americans' rights.

She was fearless enough to write an article condemning Woodrow Wilson's decision to send US troops to the border. The Texas Rangers came to the paper to try to shut it down but Jovita refused to let them in.

Idár was a fearless Hispanic American that knew that she had to fight for the rights of her people. She died in 1946 in San Antonio, Texas but lives on in spirit as one of the most influential Hispanic people in history.

Quote: "When you educate a woman, you educate a family."
